The 10 Best Restaurants in New York City

This week we released the results of the 2013 New York City Restaurants survey, and there were some big names in the top 10. Eric Ripert, Daniel Boulud, David Bouley and Thomas Keller all made appearances on the list, as did a couple of stellar Japanese restaurants and a certain gem on the border of Madison Square Park. When you truly want to try the most amazing cuisine that New York City has to offer, these are the restaurants where you should make your reservations. Click through the slide show below to see the best of the best, let us know what you think of the rankings in the comments (or via Google+ and Twitter using the hashtag #ZagatNYC2013) and pick up your copy of the guide here.

No. 3: Bouley

Food: 28
Decor: 27
Service: 27
Cost: $111

Starting with the "lovely scent of apples in the foyer", David Bouley's TriBeCa "trailblazer" is the epitome of "refined", "grown-up" dining, from the "superlative" New French fare to the "extraordinary" service and "sumptuous", jackets-required setting; granted, it can be "expensive", but in return you get a "priceless", near-"perfection" experience; P.S. the midday $55 prix fixe is "one of the best fancy lunch deals" in town.
